

State Trustees can help in the difficult times

TRYING to sort out a loved one's estate while you're grieving can be difficult.

It's time you'd rather be spending with family and friends. That's where State Trustees can help.

Many people don't realise how time-consuming and complex finalising someone's affairs can be.

Every Will is different. But even the simplest Survivorship Estate, where everything is left to a spouse or partner, comes with administrative and legal duties.

When there is no surviving partner things can become really complicated.

Managing the full administration of a loved one's estate can be a serious challenge.

Especially if you haven't had relevant experience in business, finance or law.

As Executor you are responsible for everything from paying for the funeral and other debts to selling property and distributing the estate's assets.

Many people don't realise that as executor you're liable for the decisions you make.

It's also your job to defend the estate against legal challenges so you can end up in the middle of family disputes too.

State Trustees is Victoria's largest and most experienced administrator of deceased estates.

They provide the peace of mind that comes with knowing your loved one's assets are in the hands of impartial specialists.

It's what they do best. Appoint them before probate is granted and they can take care of everything for you.
